DALLIES AROUND THE WORLD—UPI

CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA.— Is it the world's most elaborate practical joke? Or is it another hoax perpetrated by the unceasingly fertile minds of the world's young?

Whichever, a University of Virginia magazine says that its editors have possession of the true Olympic flame, and that the fire burning in the huge disc at Mexico City is only a reasonable facsimile.

And, the publication said, as the culmination of the practical joke, the flame will be transported Thursday, in a lantern, by a squadron of runners from the Charlottesville campus 100 miles to the Mexican Embassy in Washington and turned over to the diplomats.

The editors of the campus "Magazine of Satire and Broad Discussion" reportedly took the flame from the torch before the Olympics began in a carefully staged hoax that grew out of a party conversation.

Olympic Games custom is to carry a torch from the Athens, Greece site of the first games, to the site of the modern-day event.

The editors say they asked a Mexican to contact one of the runners scheduled to carry this year's flame from Vera Cruz to Mexico City. The editors obtained pictures of the real torch and had a replica made, the replica they said is now at the games.

The Mexican agreed, for a sum of money, to a transfer of the real torch with replica. The exchange took place and the false torch, which was lit with an editor's cigarette lighter, went on to Mexico City and the Olympic games," the college newspaper said.

In Mexico City, Olympic officials said they have no doubts that the Olympic flame here is the true Greek fire that left Athens.

He pointed out that "at no time was anyone ever alone with the flame.

"The runners travelled under the eyes of an armed escort from the federal highway police, generally consisting of at least three or four patrolmen in cars and on motorcycles, and were accompanied by a panel truck loaded with officials and usually trailed by busloads of reporters and photographers.
