OLYMPIC SPORTS

MEXICO CITY (UPI)—Boxing as conducted in the Olympic Games must be radically revised to protect it from charges that it is a brutal sport and to stimulate greater interest throughout the world, according to a boxing official of Thailand.

Chaloke Komarakul, president of Thai Amateur Boxing Association and a patron of the Asia Amateur Boxing Federation, said Wednesday that pre-olympic regional qualification tournaments should be held for boxers the same as for football teams.

Under such a system, only 16 boxers will come to the Olympic Games for each of the 11 classes, Komarakul said. That would mean there would be a maximum of 176 boxers whereas there are now from 300 to 400 boxers in the Olympic Games. It would mean far fewer bouts.

In order to become a champion under the present system, Komarakul said, a boxer has to fight six or seven times within 13 days. It means he will have to fight the champion of another country once every two days.

Komarakul said his proposal has been accepted in principle by the executive committee of the International Amateur Boxing Federation subject to approval of the federation's congress.

Komarakul said his proposal could go a long way toward eliminating bad decisions.

"Bad decisions are caused by bias, nationalism and over-working of the officials," he said. "With a marked reduction of bouts under my proposal, the officials would not be overworked and be in a position to render fair decisions."

"Only the real champions would be competing, calling for real technique, and there should be no grounds for calling boxing a brutal sport," Komarakul said.

DRIVE CAREFULLY-Don't Become a Statistic

Vietnam's roads were not built for the trucks and equipment the U.S. Armed Forces use. One day of driving on a Vietnamese road will tell you that.

When you drove back in the WORLD you had to drive in accordance with the laws of your state. It's the same thing here.

Back home you altered your driving methods under certain conditions; rain, darkness, heavy traffic. Vietnam should be no different.

It is your responsibility to obey local traffic laws and to DRIVE SAFELY!
